Download cadware 2012 from the largest torrent exchange, .Q: TcpClient does not receive any data I'm using a TcpClient with some defined protocol to connect to a server. If the server does not respond to the connection request, the TcpClient receives all the data from the server that could possibly be sent and then closes the connection, without waiting for the response from the server. I'm using the following code to receive data from the server:

```
TcpClient client = new TcpClient();
NetworkStream stream = client.GetStream();
while (true)
{
    if (stream.DataAvailable) { //Receive data from the server }
    if (stream.DataAvailable == false) { //The server closed the connection without any data send }
}
}
How can I receive all the data from the server, without using a try-catch-block?
A: Don't do the while loop. Change the code to look like this:

```
TcpClient client = new TcpClient();
NetworkStream stream = client.GetStream();
byte[] buffer = new byte[1];
int numBytesReceived; // read all the data from the socket.
do {
 numBytesReceived = stream.Read(buffer, 0, buffer.Length); // receive data from server.
} while (numBytesReceived > 0);

The problem with your current code is that you are consuming all the data in the network stream, but then you never actually process the data. This is what the while loop is for.
